Provincial governments in Canada are wrestling with the challenges of cannabis legalization as the Federal Government targets a summer 2018 legalization date. Some of the issues bandied about by politicians are child safety in the wake of legalization, how consumption will change impaired driving laws, and, a crucial point for politicians and bureaucrats, how tax revenue will be extracted.

A Nanos Research poll of 1,000 Canadians revealed divisions on these points. In setting the rules, 57% of respondents said the Federal Government should lay the groundwork, 32% want the responsibility to go to the provinces, and 11% are unsure.
